

Joint Open letter

To: German Agricultural Minister Cem Oezdemir

24/11/2020

Subject: Civil Society Organisations from the Global South in support of Germany's move to prohibit the export of EU-banned pesticides

Dear honourable Agricultural Minister Cem Oezdemir,

We, the signing 274 organisations from 54 countries, would like to express our appreciation and support for Germany's move forward to prohibit the export of EU-banned pesticides that endanger our people and the planet, our livelihoods and wellbeing.

We thank you, Minister Oezdemir, for your statement, made on September 11, acknowledging that it is not acceptable that Germany continues to produce and export pesticides that have rightly been banned on its own territory to protect people's health and that people throughout the world, including farmers, have the same right to health.

In our countries, our peoples' health and livelihoods are threatened by Highly Hazardous Pesticides, such as those that are banned in the EU, but are nonetheless allowed to be exported to countries outside the EU. In those exports, Germany plays a relevant role with 8,525 tonnes of unauthorised active pesticide substances exported in 2021 alone¹. These pesticides are known to cause acute poisonings amongst farmers as well as chronic illnesses like cancer, or have the potential to disrupt peoples' endocrine systems, putting especially the unborn, children, and women at risk. Some of these pesticides are also known water contaminants or are known to harm and even eliminate populations of beneficial insects, which endangers biodiversity, pollination, natural pest control, and consequently people's food security and health.

With the prohibition of the export of Highly Hazardous Pesticides already banned in the EU, Germany will take the necessary steps to fulfil its extraterritorial state obligations to protect people abroad from human rights violations. The states' obligations under international human rights law derive from the international human rights covenants (ICESCR and ICCPR), and have been detailed more recently in »UNDROP« specifically for the case of peasants and other people working in rural areas. In UNDROP the German government has a clear legal basis for adopting laws designed to ban the commercialization of the most hazardous pesticides.

We appeal to you, your colleague ministers and coalition partners, to ensure that the legislation you are working on will prevent future exports of banned pesticides in a comprehensive and consistent manner. We urge you to ban the export of all pesticides that are not approved in the European Union – no matter if they are exported as products or active ingredients. The mere export ban of formulated pesticide products will not be sufficient to prevent harm, as exporters could just shift to exporting active ingredients, which would then be formulated and used in the importing country. Additionally, to ensure a meaningful impact, we ask that the export ban includes pesticides that are considered to be too dangerous both for people's health and for the environment and biodiversity.

Furthermore, we would like to stress that the export ban of EU-banned pesticides can only be a first step towards a global phase-out of Highly Hazardous Pesticides and a broader structural transition towards organic agriculture and agroecology to ensure that food systems support the wellbeing of people and planet, based on the fulfilment of basic human rights.

The signing 274 organisations from 54 countries appeal to Germany to make a courageous move. We express our support and we are convinced that if Germany upholds its commitment to reduce unsustainable double standards in pesticide trade with the planned new legislation, it will set a model for other countries and regions to follow and will be an important step to reduce the harm from highly hazardous pesticides suffered by all people and the planet.
