The Million Tree Campaign in Palestine

From resilience to resistance

Far from mainstream media that
silence the voices
of the Indigenous

Away from environmental conferences
and lavish
dinner parties
that turn a blind
eye to the destruction of Palestine's food
system

Nearer to the hearts and homes of Palestinian farmers, whose orchards were razed, soil and water poisoned, and lands

violently seized,

A collective of people began their work two decades ago,
to ring the bell, light up hope, and resist the systemic violence against Indigenous communities,
their food system and environment.

The Arab Group for the Protection of Nature (APN), launched its Million Tree Campaign in Palestine under the slogan “They uproot one, we plant ten,”

To resist
the uprooting of
trees and people,

To bring back life to devastated
orchards,

To safeguard lands and
culture,

To restore Palestine’s
sovereignty over food and economy.

Since 2001, hand in hand with local farmers and partners, and a network of supporters from around the world, the movement has:

Planted

2,676,666 trees

For

30,721 Palestinian farmers

Supporting over

225,076 family members

Spanning an area of 134,785 dunams (~33,306 acres)

The campaign planted millions of trees, with high nutritional, economic and cultural value:

Olive
1,322,920

Grape
470,568

Pomegranate
40,283

Guava
41,745

Fig
69,971

Stone fruits
371,207

Citrus
280,633

Apple
24,465

Other trees
54,874

In all the occupied areas
the campaign could reach:

240,670

Tulkarem

175,472

Qalqilya

Salfit

101,028

146,595

Ramallah

281,129

Bethlehem

298,636

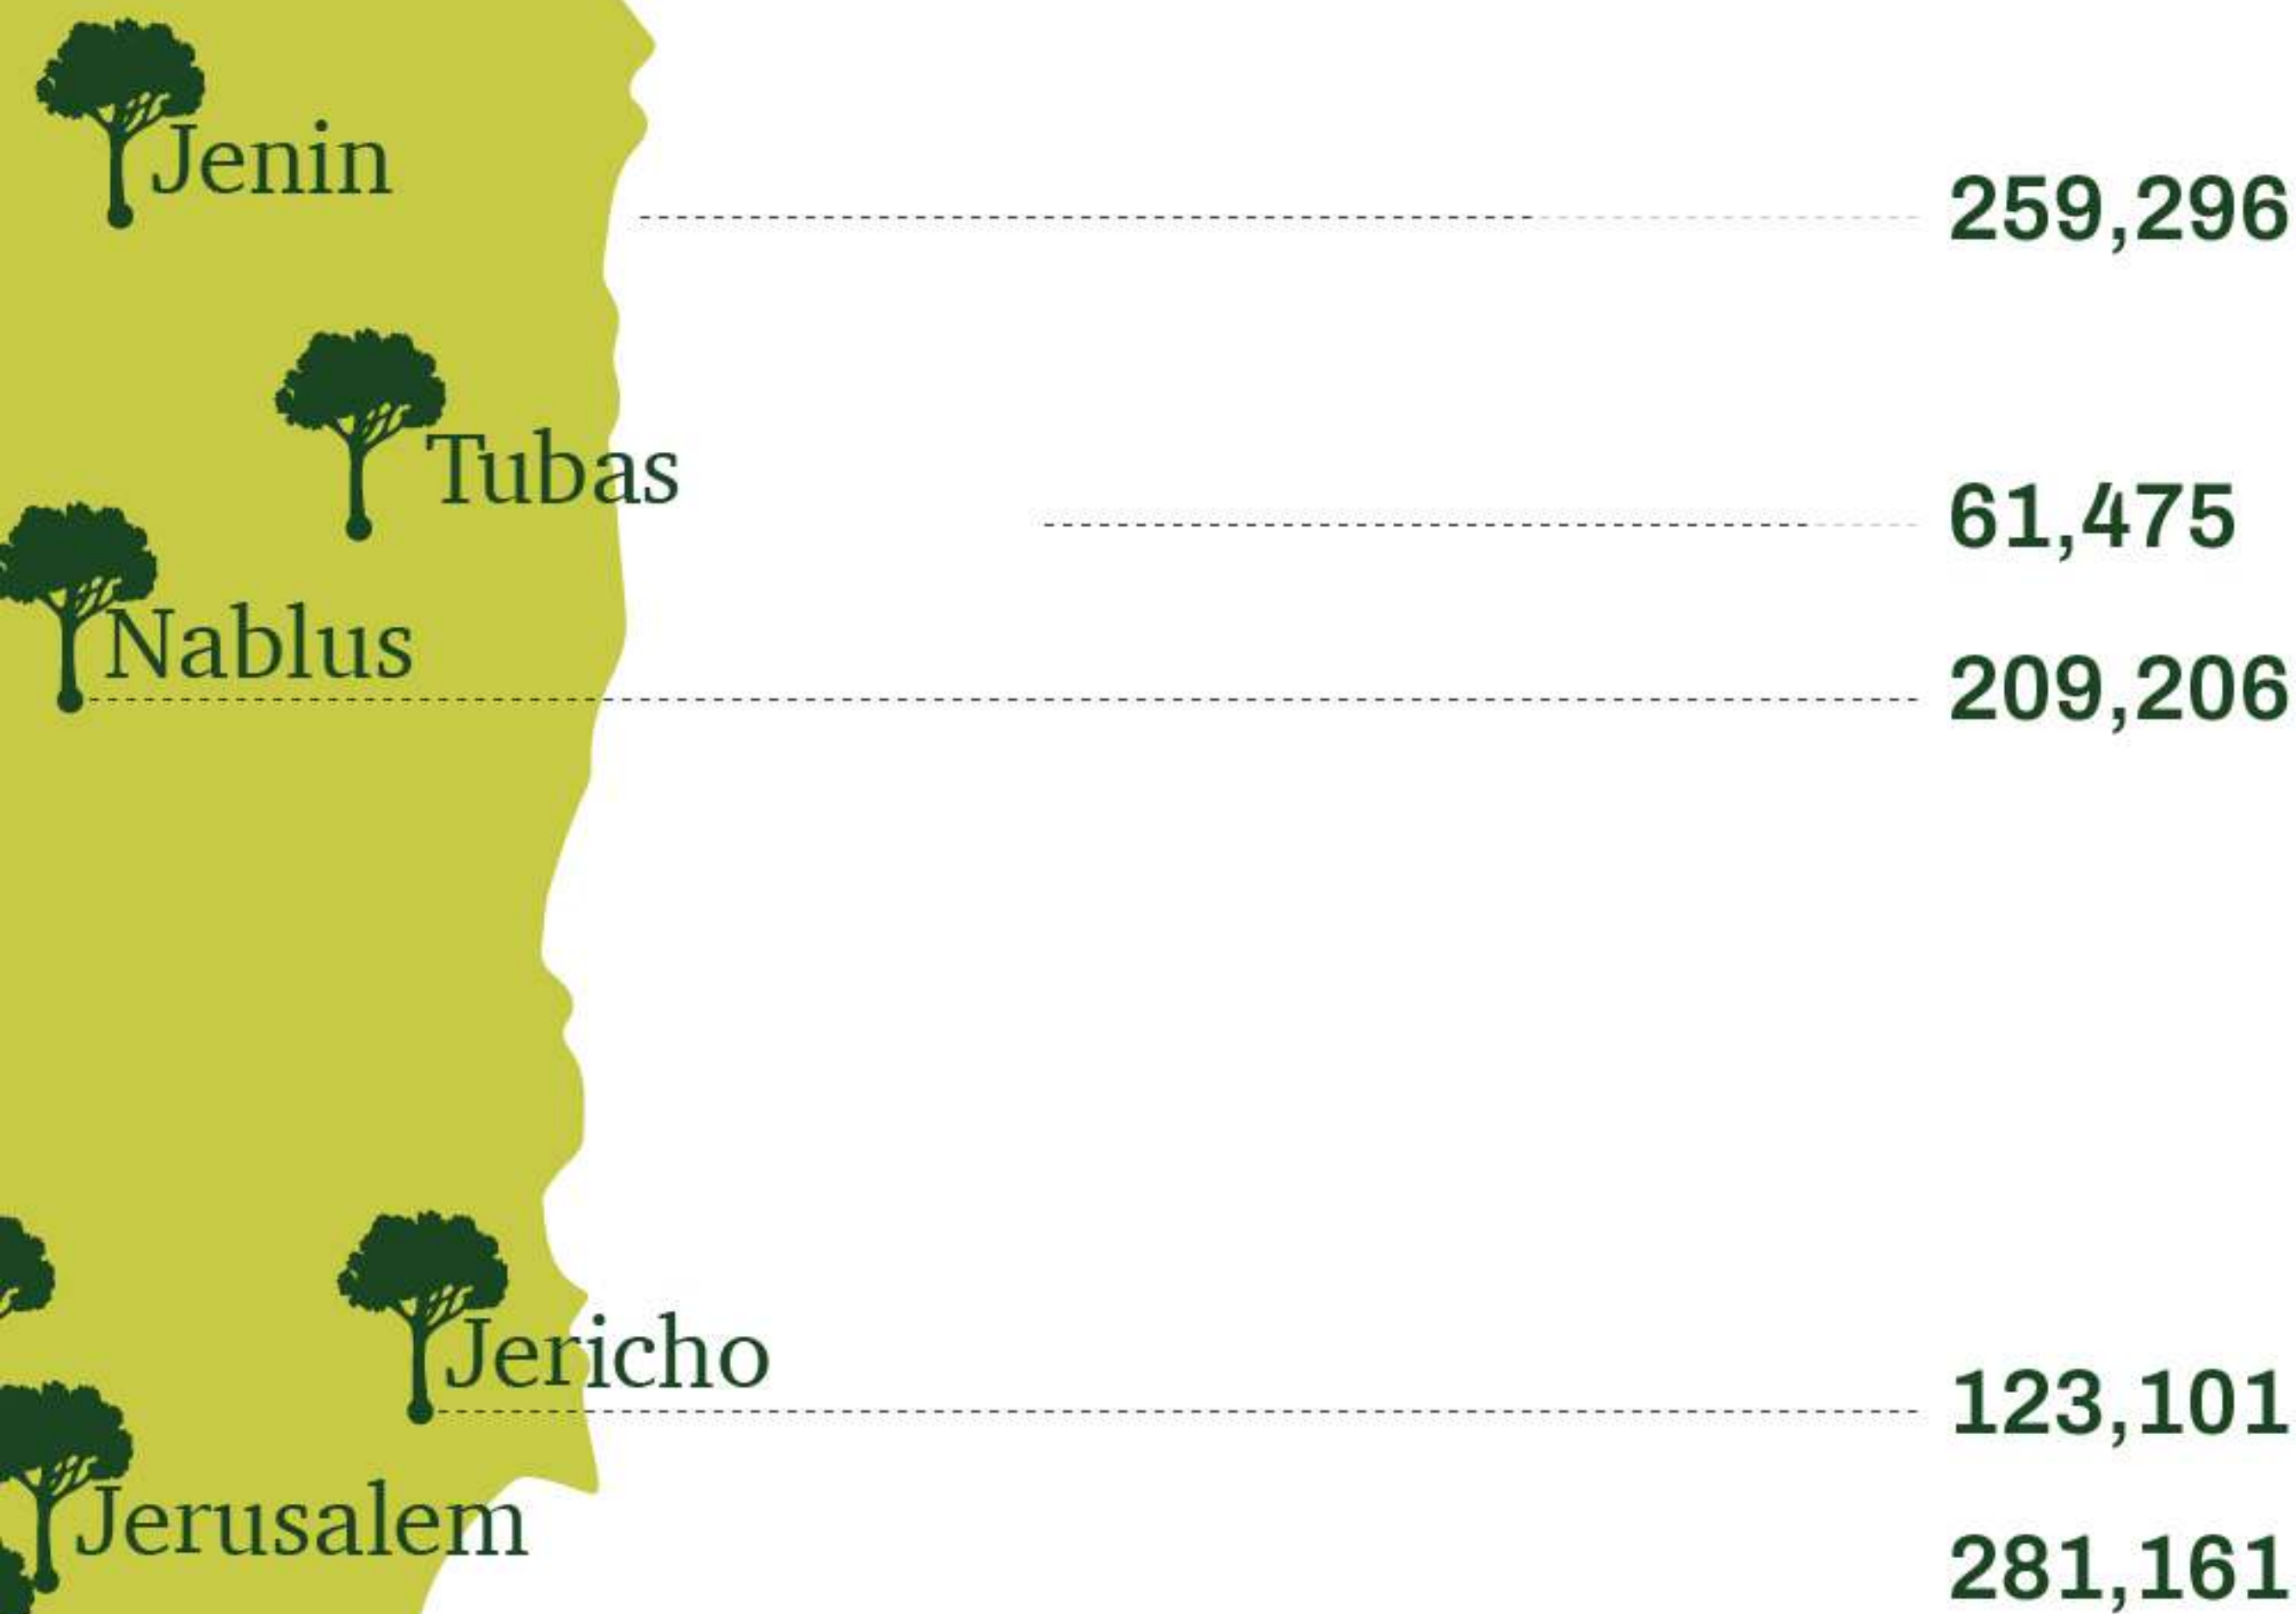

Hebron

459,493

Gaza

Inside the green line 39,404

The campaign also led many projects to support food sovereignty including:

construction
of wells

cultivation of indigenous seeds

support to animal
husbandry
